Dear Dr. Henney,

I am writing you to have the FDA to reverse its policy on genetically engineered food. I believe that consumers have a right to know what food goes into their mouths. Therefore, I ask that the FDA require that genetically engineered foods be labeled, or at the very least allow foods to carry the label "contains no genetically engineered ingredients" and encourage companies that use genetically engineered ingredients to label their products as such.

It is unethical to deny consumers the right to know what foods they are eating. Please make the right decision by allowing consumers to decide for themselves whether or not they want to consume genetically engineered foods. It should be the consumers' choice, not the government's.

Sincerely,

Evan Stajduhar
